Dear Peter,

Thank you for registering for "Redefining your risk framework: is your company prepared to respond to new forms of risk?".

Hear from the experts:

- Hear from Steve Santini, former Managing Director of Global Information Security at Bank of America, about developing a framework with the proper controls in place to adapt to these new forms of risk.

- Gain an insider's perspective from Paula Luff, Founder & CEO at Viso Strategies Corporation and former VP Corporate Social Responsibility at Hess Corporation, on the evolving role of the corporate decision-makers involved in implementing and overseeing this framework.

-Learn about the potential consequences and costs associated with unpreparedness from Get The Net's Co-Founder and Bank of America's former Managing Director Kevin Beauregard.

-Understand the big picture view of this changing landscape from eRevalue's Susanne Katus, VP Business Development.

Today, there are 10 times the amount of disclosure requirements on environmental, social and corporate governance (ESG) issues than just 2 years ago. Coupled with rising investor demands and public scrutiny, more compliance requirements are reshaping the role of corporate decision-makers who are now, more than ever, accountable for impacts across their value chain.

Companies need a reliable and systematic process in place to quickly understand which issues present a real risk. With so much information out there, it can be difficult to maintain a global view while responding appropriately to differing local regulatory requirements and stakeholder demands.

This webinar will explore how corporate decision-makers can equip themselves with the tools necessary to understand and monitor potential risks across their value chain, and have the evidence needed to illustrate that this process is under control.
