Donald Trump is poised to become the next U.S. presidential candidate for the Republican Party. And that is, in part, because corporations like Coca-Cola will stand beside him.

Coca-Cola is a regular sponsor of the Republican National Convention (RNC), and is poised to do it again -- unless we do something about it.

By sponsoring the RNC, Coca-Cola is essentially supporting a candidate who has encouraged hatred and violence, looked the other way when Black people were targeted at his rallies, and has only grudgingly distanced himself from a known Ku Klux Klan leader.

Let's make sure Coke can't sponsor hate without us holding it accountable.

Tell Coke to stop sponsoring hate.

This isn't just about U.S. politics. The choice of who is selected as the presidential nominee has global ramifications. Not all of us can impact Trump with our vote, but we can influence global giants like Coca-Cola who depend on a diverse and growing customer base outside the U.S.

Corporate sponsorship is not neutral. When people's lives are at stake, you don't get to stand idly by while a xenophobic demagogue takes power.
