2015 tipping point of open education platforms

whats really confusing (see note 1 below) is none of the open education platforms that could do this have the relevant leadership/cashflow and goodwill models -so the second question becomes do we know anyone who can help change this - do you know paul farmer well enough to pick up the phone to him or eg whats your relationship with brahman or others at the world bank where you mention their india development market helped you develop sms app in process of monitoring TB or can we build tedx alumni all of whom also want this so they can get on wit their curriculum

note 1 the world bank could have been the perfect platform PLATFORM it is a COURSEERA MOOC partner its not interested in the segment that makes money out of monopoly certifications- its interested in the ON DEMAND segment (ie like) khan that is always freely there so people can keep improving the dashboard and students can viralise what bits empower them to do things (washington dc has enough partners with unique to world capabilities in scaling open education that they could have helped transform the world bank so as never again lose preferential option poor processes as core to how the race to end poverty is empowered)

however either jim kim is either too modest about making sure his and paul farmers own preferential poor practice curriculum is one of the first world bank courses or he feels he hasn't got the power to demand that because my limited conversations with brahman since ted reveal that all sorts of powerful lobby groups inside the world bank are now queuing up to run a coursera- and of course most of those are those whose knowledge sustainability millennial need to wholly change to be bottom-up and open if the world bank was ever to mobilise empowerment of end of poverty naila knows brahman well but due to lots of diary problems hasn't had time yet to see if brahman has a plan to re-open world bank's open learning campus!

meanwhile naila's friends know kagame -rwanda being the number 1 africa knowledge lab for all partners in health training and will likely be setting up a meeting with kagame team in april

so I hope these ideas illustrate enough reasons why the two of you need to be connecting - there are many other ones that could win-win too naila also knows sir fazle abed well- sadly if we don't get him enjoying active role in an editorial board of community health dashboard within next 6 months everything brac could have help millennials open source on community health or community everything will have likely vaporised as the power struggles inside brac are even faster-vicious than the ones inside the world bank and have a 6 months deadline whereas world bank opportunity continues to summer 2017 when jim kim presidency is unlikely to be renewed by next president of usa unless there's a candidate unlike any US has seen in assuming the straightforward ways (eg above fail) we have a few more deadlines in 2015 to get back at tipping point late september being the main one- there is a double opportunity- the activist group of first ladies meet on the fringe of the opening week of UN year- they need to have specified what open learning platform they want to get their curricula out- fortunately kenyas first ladies and naila are already experimenting with what platform they need at the same time the pope is talking to congress- in fact all religions that can help sustain end poverty have different but exactly convergent languages for barefoot practitioners or preferential option poor- out of dc we need 2 clubs - one catholic, one every religion- they will need to make sure that its not just one day of POP in congress as happened with yunus gold medal but every day afterwards- this is where millennials sustainability out of washington dc's last stand will happen- there are another 20 capitals that can be mapped where last millennials or bottom-up womens empowerment stands will happen that is if UN 2015 is truly to be the biggest transformation year in its existence something ban ki-moon wants but 99.999% of UN inside lobbyists dont-... in november the ted turner family have a last go at reviewing whether the billion dollars they spent in UN has changed anything in ways that nobel peace laureate youth or womens empowerment networks can value

Dear All,

Just landed in NYC, will leave for Chicago on 11th evening. And will be in DC for meetings around world TB day.

When and where could we meet?

Best
Shelly

Understanding who's who of health education for poorest is very urgent for us- probably next month we will be trying to linkin rwanada to teaching community health service on 5 billion person elearning satellite.

Also we are hoping to help co-host POP medical student exchanges across leading capitals of the world (just in light way that is synergetic to what we are all doing anyway)

Dr Ranga is india regions connector of the satellite

thanks chris

PS Shelly do you have a link to 25% of TB people of cambodia you are treating

Shelly's heroic worldbank tedx is here Can we conquer tuberculosis? | Shelly Batra | TEDxWBG
